

Elena was born in London and lived in Italy as a child before moving to the Boston area. After spending her childhood in Boston and traveling extensively, she moved to Colorado where she studied molecular, cellular and developmental biology at the University of Colorado, Boulder. She has experience working in academic research as well as the biotech industry, and currently provides market research services to biological consumable producers. In her spare time she enjoys learning about international finance, skiing and mountain biking.

